Music and Medicine is a new international journal that offers an integrative forum for clinical practice and research of applied music in medical settings and allied institutions.

The Editors seek empirical research studies, clinical case reports, and applied models explicating theory, development, and practice across the health, behavioral and neurosciences. Music and Medicine will emphasize research practices that integrate music, music psychology, music cognition, music neurology, music therapy, and infant and early child development into medical practice and knowledge. The journal will address research and clinical practices related to music psychotherapy and wellness practices inclusive of the health of musicians. Methodology will favor both quantitative and qualitative research outcomes.

Articles from a wide variety of perspectives, including academic and practice forums will be featured. Medical music perspectives from the neurosciences, clinical and integrative medicine, oncology, music therapy, psychology, infant stimulation, pain and palliative medicine, spiritual care, early intervention, nursing research, health research, social work, and music thanatology will be prominent.

Music and Medicine will serve as a premiere outlet for innovative and scientifically valid work in the field of music and medicine. Topics will include

- ❖ Analgesia and Music Sedation
- ❖ Brain Music Approaches
- ❖ Cancer Care: Active and Receptive Music Approaches
