Each quarterly issue of CJSP offers broad-based, multidisciplinary original research, reviews, case studies, and media reviews on topics such as:

- Changes in school demographics and cultural diversity
- Early identification of learning, emotional, and social problems
- Ecological and environmental aspects of behavior
- Education of exceptional children
- Ethical, training, and practice standards
- Evidence-driven psychological assessment
- Immigrant and indigenous populations
- Intelligence, personality and conative measures
- Interdisciplinary collaboration
- Modeling
- Prevention strategies
- Resiliency and wellness
- Responses-to-intervention (the RTI model)
- Standardized tests
- Theoretical and applied psychology in educational settings

The Canadian Journal of School Psychology invites professionals concerned with these and related areas to submit articles, reviews, media reviews, or topical issue proposals to the editors. The Canadian Journal of School Psychology is an interdisciplinary publication, and welcomes submissions by psychologists, educators, and other related professionals.
