Information for Candidates:

The Journal of Management (http://jom.sagepub.com) is among the elite journals in the field of management. As such, it receives over 900 submissions per year, at present. Serving as editor then requires both a commitment of time and good management skills. Potential applicants are encouraged to consider arrangements that would help with the workload. We have also worked to reduce the administrative burden through the use of an electronic submissions and paper management platform.

The SMA and the Journal of Management have historically benefitted from a cooperative arrangement between the Association and the Editor’s home institution. The SMA supports the editorial operation by paying the direct costs associated with running a top journal. These costs include such things as:

- Copy editor and proof readers;
- Office expenses, including supplies, telephone, copying and publications;
- Travel to support the journal
- Editorial board meetings at the Academy of Management and SMA
- Part-time administrative support.

Home institutions have traditionally provided additional support including:

- Reduced teaching assignments;
- Summer salary stipend for the editor;
- Graduate assistants or student workers;
- Administrative support
- Technology support and office space
