Policy, Politics, & Nursing Practice is a quarterly, peer-reviewed journal that explores the multiple relationships between nursing and health policy. It serves as a major source of data-based study, policy analysis and discussion on timely, relevant policy issues for nurses in a broad variety of roles and settings, and for others outside of nursing who are interested in nursing-related policy issues.

Policy, Politics, & Nursing Practice includes articles on a variety of topics and issues, including:
- Legislation and regulation affecting nursing practice, the nursing workforce and nurses’ practice environments;
- Political activity as a means of effecting policy change;
- Nurses’ roles as policy-makers, including experiences as legislators, agency officials, advocates and political leaders;
- The role of nursing organizations and other interest groups in shaping health policy;
- Advancing solutions to health care disparities and increasing diversity in nursing and other health care professions;
- Nurses’ role in advancing health care quality and patient safety;
- Comparative analysis of policy-related nursing issues in different countries;
- International migration of health care professionals and its impact on both host and source countries.

The journal aims to:
- Provide accessible, relevant exploration of public policy, the legislative and regulatory processes, and their impact on nursing practice;
- Examine nurses’ roles in health policy and the political process;
- Explore the role of nursing in the health care system and health policy development;
- Provide a forum for evidence-based policy analysis and discussion.
